This four bay wide, four story high brick and stone building is a duplex. The first floor is stone, and the three floors above that are brick. The stone first level has doors in the center two bays, with 1-light store windows to the outsides.

The east building (housing The Morpheus Gallery in 1998) has splayed jack arches above the 1/1 sash windows on its second and third floors. The fourth floor has small square one-light windows in each of the two bays.

The west building (housing Maria's Horoscope Shop in 1998) has no arches above its 1/1 sash windows on all second, third, and fourth floors. The fourth floor windows are small square windows, the openings the size of those on the east building.

The west gable end of the west building has a door in the north bay, and a 1/1 window just to its south, but nothing in the southernmost two bays of the second floor. Above this door is a 1/1 sash window on the 3rd floor. The fourth floor has 1/1 sash windows in the northern two bays. There is a shed-roofed frame addition on the rear of the building.

The roofs of both buildings have skylights. The west building has a flush brick chimney on the south side of the west gable peak. The east building has a chimney on either side of the east gable peak. This facade abuts the building to the east.
